THE DEAD FINANCIAL KING

JAY GOULD'S FUNERAL.

The Ceremonies to Take Place Monday and Interment to Be Made on Tuesday. New York, Dec. 3 .- The house on Fifth avenue, where lived, until yesterday, the greatest stock manipulator of the age, whose financial exploits read like a romance, and who managed to accumulate a hundred millions of dollars in three decades, was the center of great interest today. Inside the Gould mansion all was quiet. The blinds were drawn, and a long streamer of crape fluttered from the doorbell handle. Many carriages stood and at the house of Edwin Gould, No. 1 East Forty-seventh street. The members of the family were, however, entirely inaccessible to any except their most intimate friends. Cards presented at the house, or at the house of either of the sons with a view of seeing the members of the sons with a view of seeing the members of the family, met with the answer that they could not be seen. Sometimes there was quite a jam in front of the Gould house. Ladies would order their coachman to stop, and would peer inquisitively out of their carriage windows. Pedestrians, too, would linger on the corpora for a few moments to look on the corners for a few moments to look at the house and comment with each other. As might have been expected, the "cranks" were on hand. Whenever they began to air their ideas too freely a policeman made them move on. One of these cranks started to expound on the singular coincidence that it was on the first Friday in December, one year ago that bomb-thrower Norris blew up Russell Sage's office, and that on the first Friday in December Jay Gould had Undertaker Main called at the house shortly after 10 o'clock this morning to get his instructions about the funeral. The casket is of plain oak covered with black broadcloth and having oxydized silblack broadcloth and having oxydized sil-ver handles and an oxydized silver plate. The inscription on the latter reads:

died in the ownership of the large interests in these properties, to the growth and development of which he had so largely contributed.

JAY GOULD, Born May 27, 1836, Died Dec. 2, 1832.

The arrangements for the funeral are thus announced: Services will be held at the house Monday, at i o'clock P. M. Rev. Dr. John R. Paxton, of the West Presbyterian Church, Rev. Dr. MacCracken, chancellor of the University of the City of New York, and Rev. Roderick Terry, of the South Reformed Church, will conduct the burial services of the Protestant Episcopal Church. The clergymen, in addition to the ritual of the Episcopal services, will offer extemporaneous prayers. Music will be rendered by a quartet from the choir of Rev. Dr. Paxton's church, composed as follows: Mme. Clementine de Vere Sappio, Mrs. Carl Alves, Erickson S. Bushnell and Payne Clark. The musical numbers will comprise an opening anthem, Cardinal Newman's hymn, "Lead, Kindly Light," and the hymn, "Nearer, My God, to Thee," There will be no formal addresses by the clergymen.

After the funeral are to his properties the benefit not only of his genius, but of his diligence and industry, which, until his health gave way, never tired. He did not always receive the praise to waich he was entitled. He did not invest his wealth in iands or buildings, or governments, or established securities, and content himself with idly receiving their income. His industries gave daily employment to their families, His enterprise contributed more 'argely to the opening and development of the western and southwestern parts of the country than that of any other man. At his death, probably nor give it industry, which, until his health gave way, never tired. He did not always receive the praise to waich he was entitled. He did not always receive the praise to his genius, but of his did not always receive the praise to waich he was entitled. He did not always receive the praise to waich he was entitled. After the funeral services the members of the family will take their last look at the features of the dead financier. Tuesday morning the body will be taken to Woodlawn Cemetery and placed in the family vault beside that of his wife, whose death he never ceased to mourn. H. Q. French, the architect who designed and built the mausoleum, was to-day in the cemetery in Woodlawn making arrangements. The mourners at the finneral will include the following members of the immediate family: Mr. and Mrs. George Gould, Mr. Howard Gould, Miss Helen M. Gould, Frank Gould, the children, and Abraham Gould, the children, and Mrs. Palen and Mrs. Harris, who live near Philadelphia. Many prominent railroad men of the Gould systems of the West, including Mr. Clark, president of the Union Pacific railroad, have signified their intention of being present at the funeral on Monday. Every effort will be made to carry out the wishes of Mr. Gonid that the funeral be plain and uncetentatious in every way.

The next section makes the tax a lien upon the property until it is paid. Payment within six months gives a discount of 5 per cent.; if it is not paid in eighteen months a penalty of 10 per cent. is provided. The controller, who collects the tax, deducts a fee and the balance goes into the State treasury. A tax of 1 per cent. on the estate, it is estimated, would yield from $650,000 to $1,000,000, on which the controller's fee would be from $9,000 to $13,000.

At the office of the corporation counsel it was said that if Mr. Gould had left his property in the hands of trustees, the interest to go to his children, this would not operate to prevent the levying and collecting of the tax. All property left out of the lineal descent is taxable at 5 per cent. on its market value.

IN A TIGHT PLACE.

An Occasion When Gould Was at the Mercy of the Bears, but Soon Turned the Tables. NEW YORK, Dec. 3.-The Herald will say to-morrow morning that a popular error about Jay Gould is the notion that he was invincible. In 1866 a promisory note for $500, with his name, went begging around Wall street at a heavy discount. Only eight years ago he was on the verge of failure, This was after the panic of May, 1884, one of the few times when he was tempted into the stock market as a speculator in order to hold up the price of stocks with which he was bardened. The late Charles F. Weerishoffer, Henry N. Smith and other operators were united in a combined effort to bear the securities which Gould was carrying. He had supported them for a time by obtaining sterling bills igiving his securities as collateral) and then converting the bills into cash. But sterling loans, like all others, come to mutiny, the bears were as unscrupulous as himself, bold, skillful and persistent. Gould's Western Union fell to 49 and his Missouri Pacific to 62. He was beaten. One morning he had his lawyers execute an assignment of his property, and on the following day his yacht went down to Long Branch, where the bear operators were summering. Gould's emissaries landed and held a conference with his foes. They bore his ultimatum, a copy of the assignment and the statement that unless the bears made terms with him he would on the following morning file the assignment and give public notice that he was unable to meet his engagements. At that time he was supposed to owe about $20,000,000, and his failure would create a bigger panic than the one the securities which Gould was carrying. are would create a bigger panic than the one the street had just passed through. Many of the firms with which the bear combine the street had just passed through. Many of the firms with which the bear combine had short contracts outstanding would be heavy losers. The bears agreed to "let up" on Gould on condition that he should turn over to them fifty thousand shares of Western Union at the current market price, $50 per share. This enabled them to make delivery of the shares they had sold at high prices. The bears were heavily short of driver, was reinstated, but Dr. Sale was not.

Gould's Missouri Pacific, however. With $2,500,000 of their money obtained for the fifty thousand shares of Western Union, he speedily rushed up Missouri Pacific to par, $160 per share, an advance of nearly $40, and forced them to settle on terms of his dictation. If the bears had had enough grit on that Sunday Gould's career would have terminated very differently. As it was, the shock resulted in Gould's making preparations to consolidate and conserve preparations to consolidate and conserve the securities he owned, and he never again took any active part in manipulating the

Western Union Directors Adopt Resolutions

Complimentary to Jay Gould. NEW YORK, Dec. 3 .- A meeting of the directors of the Western Union Telegraph Company was held at noon in President Green's room, in the Western Union Building. The directors present were Dr. Nor-Green president, Gen. Thomas T. Eckert vice-president and general manager, John Van Horne second vice-president, Russell Sage, Samuel F. Sloan, John G. Moore and John T. Terry. The following resolutions were adopted on the death of Jay Gould:

IN MEMORIAM. Jay Gould died at his residence, in the city of New York, on Friday. Dec. 2, 1892, in the fifty-seventh year of his age. He had been a director of this company for about twelve years, and was such at the time of his death. It is fitting, therefore, that it shall place upon its records its estimate of Mr. Gould's character and services, and its sorrowful sense of its great loss in his death, Familiarity with him, acquired through years of constant intercourse, enables the members of its directory to speak concerning him with knowledge and confidence. What follow are words, not of eulogy, but of just and considerate esti-history of this company, have had a place in its counsels, Mr. Gould was in some respects the most remarkable. The intellectual qualities to which he owed his almost unexamped success are not far to seek. Underlying all was his faith in the continued growth, advancement and prosin the continued growth, advancement and prosperity of our country. He forecast the future with confidence, and saw in their earlier stages the coming values of such great properties as the Union Pacific, Kansas Pacific, Missouri Pacific, Manhattan railway and Western Union.

He boldly risked all on the soundness of his judgment. His judgment concerning the values of corporate properties singly, and of their possibilities for profitable combination, amounted to positive genius—a genius in these lines probably never surpassed if equaled. Acguiring these properties, he gave his energies to quiring these properties, he gave his energies to their development. This was not the hasty work of a day, but the slow work of years, as he ment of which he had so largely contributed.

He was not merely or chiefly a speculator. He was a practical and expert manager of railways. He was at home in every department of the service. He knew his properties intimately. He could instantly detect anything wrong. He inspected them in person regularly. He gave to his properties the benefit not only of his genius, but of his diligence and industry which until his health gave way never

The board of directors of the Missouri Pacific Railway Company, assembled this day, upon the announcement of the death of the president, recalling with great sensibility his long and eminent services and his distinguished achievements in the interests of this company, conscious of its irreparable loss, and sensible to their own personal bereavement, desiring to leave a lasting tribute to the memory of the abie and faithful officer, the beloved associate and friend and the great man who has passed away, do hereby make this record:

tax of 1 per cent. Section 2 of Chapter 399

says:

When the property or any beneficial interest therein passes by any such transfer to or for the use of any father, mother, husband, wife, child, brother, sister, wife or widow of a son, or the husband of a daughter, or any child or children adopted by such in conformity with the laws of this state, or to any person to whom any such decendent, grantor, donor or vender for not less than ten years prior to such transfer stood in the mutually acknowledged relation of a parent, or to any lineal descendant of such decedent grantor, donor, or vender, born in lawful wedlock, such transfer shall not be taxable under this act, unless it is personal property to the value of $10,000 or more, in which case it shall be taxable under this act at the rate of 1 per its great resources. Of the personal qualities of Mr. Gould we may record the just estimate of those who by long and intimate association with him have been made, as we sociation with him have been made, as we believe, fit judges. Mr. Gould was a man of tried personal and moral courage; a kind, considerate and generous friend; modest in demeanor, moderate in speech, judicial and just in his judgments. To those whose business and per sonal relationship to him had been longest and closest he was most endeared. History will record a judgment of those qualities which are known to the world and which in the estimate of the world distinguished him as a great man. To us he was known as a man with estimate of the world distinguished him as a great man. To us he was known as a man with these and other higher personal qualities. This is the estimate which we make, and which we hand down to such as may in future desire to consult the judgment of those among his contemporaries who were also his associates.

To the members who are present to-day the death of Mr. Gould comes as the loss of a friend, associate and adviser. To those of our board whose relationship to him was nearer and who to-day lament the loss of a loving father, the affliction is one to which we can do no more than refer in words of inadequate condolence.

Resolved, That the foregoing record be spread on the minutes of this board, and that copies, suitably engrossed and signed by the members of the board, be transmitted to the family.

Resolutions of Railway Engineers. LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Dec. 3 .- At a special meeting of Division No. 182, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, held in this city to-day, the following resolutions were Resolved, That in the death of Mr. Jay Gould we, the locomotive engineers employed on the Arkansas and central division of the St. Louis, Iron Mourtain & Southern railway, a portion of the great Missouri Pacific system, of which Mr. Gould was the executive head, extend to his be-reaved family our most heartfelt sympathy in their irreparable loss.

Resolved, That in the death of Mr. Gould we, in common with the vast army of locomotive engrandest and organized labor, have lost one of its grandest and most liberal benefactors. He possessed the confidence of the laboring man, as well as that of the capitalist, and by this he has proven himself one of the most remarkable and successful financiers of the country, and this community has lost a man who has done more to develop the great Southwest than any one man; one to whom every citizen of this great land may point with pride as an illustration of what personal energy will do. $600,000 a Year for Boston Charities.

Boston, Dec. 3.—The recent death of Mrs. Ashton, at Tunbridge Wells, Cheshire, England, has brought to Boston the distribution of a munificent legacy among the poor of this city. The income is $600,000 on the invested property of Elisha Vinton Ashton, a Bostonian who married an English lady, and died in London in 1884. The money is to be shared equally among twenty-eight well-known Boston charities, covering a wide range of benevolent work.

ON PHYSICAL EXPRESSION

Mrs. Russell Tells Indianapolis Women How to Stand Up and Fall Down,

As Well as the Proper Method of Walking, Bowing, Sitting Down and Various Other Motions.

To the energy and influence of a few women a large number of their friends are indebted for the appearance of Mrs. Edmund Russell, the famous exponent of Delsartism, for a single talk in this city. Mrs. Russell came yesterday morning and was the guest of Mrs. May Wright Sewall. During the morning Mrs. Russell met quite a number of Indianapolitans informally. The hour announced the lecture was 3 o'clock, but it was quite twenty minutes before 4 o'clock when the lady, escorted by Mrs. Sewall, entered the east parlor of the Propylæum and faced an audience of about 125 women. Her entrance was quite theatrical. She paused at the door, smiled and looked about her and then slowly glided to the platform. There was no perceptible walking and her movement exemplified the expression "gliding."

Mrs. Russell has a penchant for Canton crepe shawls, and her draperies, yesterday, were of two handsomely embroidered ones, one fringe forming a border, touching the floor all around, and concealing her white kid and very highheeled slippers, and the other the heading for the back breadth and the under arm-hole. Tightfitting lace sleeves, a "ladder" necklace of ivory beads tied at the back with several yards of white ribbon, a gold tissue Queen Katharine cap, and white kid gloves, and over her face was a white tissue vell. She has a plump figure, almost black hair, which she wears parted in the center and waved each side of her face and caught in a loose knot at the back. She sat while Mrs. Sewall said, "I have many times presented my friends to friends, but never has it given me greater pleasure to do so than now when I introduce you to Mrs. Edmund Russell," and followed with a flattering description of Mrs. Russell's personality, characteristics

When she has finished, Mrs. Russell arose, and standing in the center of the platform, viewed her audience calmly o'er with a "now-take-me-in" expression, while she deliberately unbuttoned removed and caressed her gloves. After a breathless and anxious period, she finally spoke r's, which went off in waves, like the theory she preaches, till they collided with the first sound of the following word. Mrs. Russeil is all movement with her hands and arms. Each sentence ment with her hands and arms. Each sentence has an arm accompaniment, no matter whether they are in harmony or not; but when Mrs. Rusel wishes to express any emotion of any kind whatever, she has perfect command of herself, and there is not the slightest passing of a single muscle to mar the beauty of the whole.

Mrs. Russell said in substance: "When talking about this subject, I scarcely know where to begin. There is a physiology of the eye and a physiology of the soul," though she did not define the latter. "There is a relation of the interior and the exterior. There are things, organs, mind, body, the soul of clothes. Well, perhaps we had better begin with the body. Now gesture is necessary to character—moral character. There is one kind of gesture that can point out things. Not so love and the passions. It is easy to play scales, but not easy to play with the soul. A man can say "it's a fact" in many ways. Clergymen say it all the time, in expounding their gospel, but they make it with an ax.

"There are degrees of expression. The technique of expression is different. To know this difference is the first step." Mrs, Russell explained how we are given notes to play in this way. We use the shoulder, the elbow, the wrists, and the points so that there are eighteen notes for the one arm. "The nerve center is at how we are given notes to play in this way. We use the shoulder, the elbow, the wrists, and the points so that there are eighteen notes for the one arm. "The nerve center is at the head, and from it the body moves in waves to the extremity of hands and feet. We move the easy parts first, the eyelid before the body, and so on down. Those nerves we use the most are the easiest to use. There are laws that must be obeyed. Arsenic in the stomach will kill; if one steals he is punished; if a man murders he is hung—though I do hope that is not the case here. We do what is useful. Now, if I were in New York to-day I should go to some lady's drawing-room, and there would meet forty or fifty other ladies, and we would talk about walking. Which waik is the most beautiful, the fastest walk, the longest walk." Then followed a dissertation about walking on heels, and on toes or front of the foot. Mrs. Russell said "To walk on the front of the foot would give that unnamable and endless charm of grace. To be a Venus de Milo you have to be developed. To be prepared for all uses in life the body must be developed for all physical functions. To walk you want strength, beauty and expression. Delsarte once said if he walked behind a man and walked as he did he would feel as the man feit. A sunken chest expresses sometimes moral degeneracy and sometimes physical degeneracy, and as one is often mistaken for the other it is well to walk with the chest up."

Mrs. Russell spoke in the same general way

chest up."

Mrs. Russell spoke in the same general way of bows, steps, sitting and falling. Of the latter there has been considerable talk. Mrs. Russell makes a practice of falling down stairs just for relaxation and exercise. In describing the bow Mrs. Russell said: "Many people bow from the waist, and, by so doing, use only the vulgar, meaty part of the body." At the conclusion it was announced that if there was a sufficient number who wished to take a lesson at $2 each in the evening, she if there was a sufficient number who wished to take a lesson at $2 each in the evening, she would give one. No one admitted that she did, and the class was not formed. Mrs. Russell was at home with Mrs. Sewall in the evening, and this morning leaves at 8 o'clock for Pittsburg.
